So gradual has been the approach of the telegraph to Hongkong, that now that it has at last become a fait accompli, people almost think of it as quite in the ordinary course of events, and look with astonishing complacency upon the accomplishment of scheme which, ten years ago, it would have been considered almost madness to hint at It was regarded as an enormous stride in intercommunication with home when the P. & O. Mail Service was inade fortnightly instead of montbly; and; when the Messageries Imperiales steamers were started and came to run fortnightly also, people began to open their eyes in surprise at the gigantic change , which had been brought about. During this time Lessers was patiently completing his grand work of the Sucz Canal; and simultaneously with it the telegraph was gradually creeping on from Alexandria to Aden, from Aden to Galle, and from Madras to Singapore; and within two years after the opening of the Canal, telegraphic communication is established between Shanghai, Hongkong, India, Europe and the United States. Thus in the busy season we shall now have steam communication by the ci-devant overland route more than weekly; while news of importance may be known in China within a the same may promote friendly relations and day or two of its occurring in Europe or the United States. Judging, however, from Shanghai, it might not be impossible to overcome this obstacle; but it is to be feared that this could not be done between Taku and Tientsin, a distance of only 28 miles by land, but considerably more by the winding and intricate river, and at a place where to judge from recent experience, official opposition would it all likelihood be greater than anywhere else. The circumstance is to be regretted as there is every reason to believe that with the rapidly increasing trade now springing up with Tientsin, a line to that place would in all likeli- Rowett.

At first, indeed, there is good reason to believe - that the opposite result will be brought about. and that the instructions sent out will commonly be to use all possible endeavours to smoothe over all difficulties that may arise. Ultimately, however, an opposite result must be produced by the force of circumstances. The Home Government will itself virtually conduct the negotiations, and it will then be impossible for them not to become acquainted with the evasions which are repeatedly made, but to which little attention is paid when from the Representatives in China, and then forcible deportation, but that persons might be Defendant pleaded had treatment, and having usually under the most favourable guise, so the former section referred to of Ordinance 9 and expessed himself as quite willing to go in Home Authorities any trouble. ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION. MEETING.

(London and China Express.) The annual general meeting wes held on the 20th April, at the offices of the Corporation; James Blyth, Eeq., in the chair, The report, which was noticed in our last, aunounced a net profit, including £7,962 brought forward, of £190,096 for the year, and proposes a dividend of 6 per cent, for the balf-year, being at the same rate as was paid in the previous balf-year, and absorbing together

£180,000, carrying forward £10,096 to the credit of next account, was read by Mr. C. J. F. Stuart, the chief manager. The Chairman, after declaring the dividend, which is to be paid clear of income-tax, moved the adoption of the report, and congratulated the meeting on the continued prosperity of the Bank. This was the tenth time they had paid 6 per cent. for the half-year, the annual dividend having been for the last five years at the rate of 12 per cent. (Cheere.) He paid a high compliment to Mr. Stuart, the chief manager, Mr. Campbell, the sub-manager, and the managers abroad, for their discretion and judgment in managing the extensive transactions which passed through their hands. (Hear, hear.) The present accounts were made up to the end of last year; but recent advices informed them that everything was going on in the most satisfactory manner. In conclusion, he expressed the regret felt by himself and colleagues at the loss the Corporation had onstained in the death of the late deputy-chair. man, Mr. Walker. Boeiul Selection. (Saturday Review.) To persons who feel themselves aggrieved by Mr. Darwin's speculations as to our ancestry, the consolution is generally held out that they should look forward to the probable condition of our posterity. If, on the one hand, we have descended from the monkeys, or from that still less flattering progenitor, the "tidal animal," how noble a being, on the other hand will be the man-if we may venture so to call him who will succeed to our supremary on the planet! Conceive a greature who is, much in advance of us as we are of one of the interior animals; to whom Shakapeare appears like a dumb animal with some radimentary indications of taste and feeling, and to whom the problems which were too complex for the intellect of Newton are self-evident truths scarcely requiring formal domonstration to a schoolboy, and let us rejoice over the glorious destinies reserved for our race. How far the consolation: is legitimate need not be inquired any more than how far the theory on which it reposes is true. Such questions require problemes or libraries instead of articles and we need only observe in plasing that the prospoot requires a very extended philanthropy to make it particularly attractive. "It is difficult to take a very lively interest in beings who are divided from us by a few millions of years, and probably most men's affections for their descendants do not extend beyond three' or four generations. But, neadming for the present what the doctrine is wellfounded, it suggests some inquiries in which we ought to be interested. Mr. Galton, in his book on Hereditary Genius, threw out some hints as to the importance of improving the breed of mankind. According to him it was at least as important to ruise a superior race of buman beings as a superior race of pigs or horses; and he further considered that it was fully as practicable. The Greeks, for example, were a nation who, in an intellectual sense, mortale. The average Athenian surpassed the average Englishman in the same direction, though not to the same extent, as that in which the Englishman surpasses the negro. Unfor-tunately that unparalleled race, was absorbed or extinguished by its inferiors, and men have attained. But there is no reason, it is argued. why the results once gained by some fortuitous ugain reached by a conscious process. If we took proper pains in promoting marriages between the best-endowed families, we should gradually produce an aristocracy ciniming good blood in a higher sense than of old; our Tuppers would become Tennysons, and higher than has hitherto been reached by any of the great poets, of old. The influence of such a process, if it could be extended to the whole nation, would be still more details of political machinery. They think comparatively little of that which is in reality a bodies and larger brains then their ancestors. The extension of the suffrage or the abolition of some remaining class privilege is hailed with disproportionate exultation, whilst few people trouble themselves to ask whether our children are growing up with sounder constitutions and more lively intellects. If it were once understood that the elevation of the general type was both desirable and practicable, we should attend to matters of more vital importance than those which are generally most keenly agitated. Such views as these, whatever may be the proportion of truth which they contain, have a rather visionary aspect. We are not prepared to legislate in the spirit, of Plato. It is pretty the race will be an object consciously pursued. by the means suggested is at a considerable distance. If we were all Quakers, and allowed marriages to be arranged by our superiors, instead of leaving them to the caprice of the people most concerned, there might be some chance of trying the experiment. As mutters stand, it seems, highly probable that the only motive present to the minds of a very vast and complicated problem lies before young persons about to marry will for some time to come be the desire of pleasing them. selves. A new school of morality may perhaps arise at some future day which will induce impetuous lovers to have some regard to the general interests of humanity; but, so far as our experience has gone, we should say that there was a very prevalent disposition on sugh occasions to allow humanity to shift for itself. In-this point of view, it is an object of some inly to improve as time goes on. Do the current have culminated, and to be returning once more towards our cousins, the monkeys ?" The first impression of anybody who looks probably be unfavourable. Nothing is more strongly marked than the perversity of the bnman race in this matter of marriage; of the ideal matches that we arrange for our friends very few ever come into being; and for the most part, however we may affect to offer smiling congratulations, we are generally conscious of a deep-seated dissatisfaction at the bottom of our bearts. It is true that the cynical observer may allege a plausible reason for this general sentiment. The opinion which everybody forms on such occasions is generally framed after the model of the bero of Locksley Hall. The marve to him is how the young lady,

Having known him, could decline On a range of narrower feelings, and a lower his. That is a never-ending and inexplicable puzzle. That so many women who have bad the advantage of our acquaintance should put up with the prigs, idiote, and thought. less dandies who manage to win their good graces, is a melancholy, though well-established, fact in human nature. Ladies look at the matter from their own point of view, and are unfaigned. ly surprised at the musculine want of tact and discrimination. The two views perhaps couna subjective character, let us try to discover most probable fate of any given person ? If, in order to discover an answer to this question. tion-we refer, of course, to popular novelists cess that they are tolerably successful in describing the most desirable type. Now, if we may take their conclusions for granted, the most prominent fact discoverable is the singular disregard, we might almost say the positive dislike which seems to be felt on all sides for the possession of more than the average amount of inis diminished by this lofty stature and graceful from his hip, and fells his antagonist as a but. But if so, facts as yet unknown have to be cher fells an ox. The frequency with which this person has made his appearance would in-dicate the feverish admiration for purely phy-sical force, the evil consequences of which have recent anti-athletic novel. But even the other type of hero, who is occasionally opposed to the the owners receiving compensation. modern gladiator, is apt to be remarkable for nothing so much as his corrous insipidity. Bir knave of the story, and will pertainly de rejected by the admirable young lady with a fortune. In short, the two old types that have so long possessed the female beart are still predominant in all our ordinary flation. The coldier or the clergyman, the fighting or the decorous personnge have their own way in the world, and y force or delicate persuasion push aside all he irregular outbursts of talent and passion. The corresponding poenliarity is equally couspicuous in the feminize ideals of the masouline nevelists. Mr. Trollope's young ludies; for example, are admirably qualified to be called in eminine language "nice." They are pretty oughging, caressing creatures, excellently cal sulated to flatter the prejudices of their lord and a mineter: but they are not allowed. to have vigorque intellects. The Amelias, spite of our strong-minded ladies, get the better of the Becky Sharpes. Our favourites are admirably adopted now, as in the days of Shakspeare, to suckle fools and chronicle small beer; and adapted for little else. If the tendency were simply to eliminate the race of those generally described, as the strong-minded, we coul t perhaps submit to the result with a tolerable amount of resignation, and not the less because we have some doubts whether strength of mind in any genuine sense is the quality really connoted by the popular epithet. But we confess that we have some prejudices in favour of intellect. Few novelists have the capacity for painting a woman of really fine intelligence, and for the most obvious of all reasons; but even George Elict, whose powers n that direction are unmistakeable, bas shown us in the Mill on the Flose what is the natural consequence of an excessive allowence of brains. Poor Maggie Tulliver goes down in the struggle, and her pretty empty-head rivals have l their own wav. Perhaps, indeed, the tendency we have des cribed is merely a collateral desult from the general-lave of modern writers for the respecibilities. Dulness and decorum get the best fit in modern novels because they are so highly prized in mottern life; and even the Above I month, muscular hero of sensational writers, though and not exceed 3 3 ... do do. do. he sppears to kick against the pricks, is at ing bottom a dunce and a stupid commonplate Above 3 months creature enough. He is essentially a against everything that savours of intellectual combinution of circumstances should not be movement, and is generally as orthodox, politically and theologically, as he is immoral in practice.

The result of our speculations to far would bothat the new race of mankind will be a little more commonplace than its predecessors; but fortunately there are other agencies at work, our Tennysons, would be raised to a level which may be expected more or less to counterbalance this marked taste for stupidity. Novels, being written in the hope of securing a large audience, necessarily flatter the prejudices of the commonplace part of mankind, who of course beneficial. Men are always quarrelling over the love respectability m re than they love any other conceivable virtue. But there is a minority, and there is no reason why it should not be an increasing minority, which has a rather far more important object—that, namely, of higher ideal. After all, there is much truth in producing a race of successors with stronger the saying that any man can marry any woman. Given a sufficient amount of determination on ither side, and, in nine cases out of ten, the desired object may be generally attained. In other words, in spite of the superficial tendency to the commonplace, the native force of atrong will is still the most important element of success in matrimonial and other enterprises. If t is true that a certain placed mediocrity has an idvantage at starting, the people who are generally doomed to celibacy are those whose who do not quite know their own minds, or have not the desirable capacity for treading on other people's toes; and apparently it is more important to determine what peculiarities operclear that the day in which the improvement of ate as a disqualification than what give the best chances of early popularity. If so, the vigour which ultimately commands success, even under modern social conditions, is the characteristic which has the best chance of gradually becoming more common. We have, however, merely thrown out a few scattered hints on a great subject. The Durwin of speicty has not as yet arison, and, when he appears, he will find that

Air Spencer Robinson's Case, (Pall Mall Gazette.)

One night the House of Commons was almost completely occupied with the case of Sir Spencer Robinson. It was presented to the House by Lord Henry Lennox, backed by Mr. Bouverie, in as complete, as moderate, and as thorough a Godowns, Offices, Shops, &c., and ? manner as any such case was ever brought unat work which has, according to Mr. Darwin's der its observation. The Government, through theory, evolved human beings out of tidal ani. Mr. Goschen and Mr. Gladstone himself, replied mais. If there are any prevalent tastes upon with a vigour which in the case of the lastsuch matters, the type to which they correspond named gentleman deserved a warmer name; and NORTH, BRITISH AND MERCANTILE should gradually become more common, and they most decidedly had the worst of the push aside the less tayoured races. And, from discussion. Upon a division upon the motion for a Committee of Inquiry-a Detached & semi-detached Dwell-) per cent. terest to inquire whether the tastes of a given division which Mr. Gladstone insisted upon "lass are likely to promote a healthy play of —a majority of 153 to 104 was recorded and their contents.

But nothing could be Otherdwelling Housesused strictly. extending our inquiry to the whole human cleaver, than that this amignity was not due to was such, and their contexts. family, it would be satisfactory, for example, to the prevalence of a delief that Sir Spencer know that the upper classes of society are like. Rubinson had been righteously dealt with, or that, as far as be was concerned the Government opinions appear to be favourable to the growth. had given any answer to the allegations made on of a superior generation, or do we appear to his behalf. The majority was one in favour of the principle upon which Ministers relied for success -that all Administrations must maintain their responsibility for the continuance in office of round upon the circle of his acquaintances would oivil servants-" in order that the Government may be responsible to the House of Commons for their conduct." And Mr. Gladstone annonneed in his most fervid manner that he was "not the man to allow any new practice which he thought vitally affecting the responeibility of Ministers to be introduced with out taking the most emphatic and decisive atens at his command for the purpose of preventing it." Of course so tremendous an an nonncement as this clavated the matter into Cabinet question almost; it looked as if it really might become a question of "going to the country." Besides, the principle is a very sound one, and ought to be jealously guarded. Of that we have no more doubt than Mr. Gladstone himself; indeed, in this very case we have had reason to deplore a disposition on the part of the Administration to shirk the Fire to the extent of $40,000, on Buildings, or responsibilities which both Ministers who on Goods stored therein. spoke last night are so anxious to retain. and a proved desire to throw those responsibilities upon precisely the very person for whose conduct they claimed the right to answer. Moreover, as Mr. Bouverie had to announce. Sir Spencer Robinson bimself did not desire a Commission of Inquiry. He sim ply wished that through a statement of facts the extent of $60,000 on Buildings, or on Goods and not exceed- 3

terbalance each other; or else we should have presented to the House of Commons by one of to admit that it is generally the most inferior lite members, that most important body, of part of either sex which is selected gentlemen and the country at large should continue the race. Assuming, however, that form a fair judgment upon his case. Accordthis unpleasant phenomenon is probably of ingly a vote was given for the principle contended for by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Goschen some more general principle. Is it possible, which probably satisfied them; and Sir Spencer for example, to fix upon the special character. Robinson had his case formally tried before istics which make celibacy or matrimony the that most august jury the gentlemen of the most probable fate of any given person? If in House of Commons, with results that must be we should think, entirely satisfactory to him. we go to the most authentic source of informs. Nobody who reads the argument on both sides. and the evidence produced on one side (the we shall not find a encouraging response, such Government had none to offer), can avoid the writers as Mr. Trolleps or Mizz Braddon tell us | conclusion that the true cause of Sir Spencer very plainly what is the ideal which most finds Robinson's dismissal is to be found in the loss favour at different social levels ... They do their of the Captain, and in Mr. Childers excesbest to devise the most attractive herose and sive though most natural unxiety to cast heroines, and we may presume from their ano. the responsibility for that disaster upon a subordingte" political civil cervant." To be sure Mr. Goschen repeatedly and emphatically de nied that this was the case; but as he was not the Minister concerned in Sir Spencer's dismissall and can only judge, like other people, by the facts and assertions placed before him, we have a fair right to dissent from Mr. Childers's tellect. We all know the hero of the sensation spologists, and do so emphatically. Upon this novel—the gentleman with a flowing board and | point we have already on various occasions ex-Yest shoulders, the apparent breadth of which pressed a strong opinion; what was said in the House of Commons does not move that opinion proportions; whose temendous muscles swell in the least; but the loss of the Captain has visibly beneath his dress coat, and who, on due yet to be discussed, and it may be that after occasions, slings out his fist with fearful force all we shall have reason to alter our judgment.
